Coffee At Work

According to a new study published in the Journal of Psychopharmacology, drinking caffeinated coffee can actually benefit your performance at work. By making people more alert and focused on the task at hand, coffee was found to improve the quality of teamwork. Researchers at Ohio State University conducted two experiments involving a group of undergraduates and found that those who drank coffee benefited from the buzz in more ways than one!

A top-down view of a tea set on a dark, textured surface. On the left, a white cup filled with amber-colored tea sits on a matching saucer. To the right, a black, textured teapot with a curved handle and spout sits on a green, woven placemat. Below the teapot are two small, round, green ceramic cups, one containing a small amount of tea. In the bottom left corner, a white book or notebook is partially visible, featuring a yellow logo that says "WAKE UP! COFFEE!" and some text about a girlfriend.
